

Searching for the Best Nanny... Desperately !: Phase 1: Recruitment (SEARCHING FOR THE BEST NANNY... DESPERATELY !)

Serie of humorous little stories of a moms many setbacks (and the few joys) in her search for the perfect nanny to look after her children. EXTRACT First things first; the advertisement. Whilst this is somewhat urgent, it is undoubtedly the easiest part of the exercise. I simply need to take last years advert and check if what I want is still the same. I still have three children and they still are wonderful. All that must be changed is their respective age. So far so good. I provide credit card details and in less time than it takes to read this paragraph, all the Mary Poppins on planet earth will have the opportunity to enthusiastically apply for this dream job. However, thats where things get tough. Half of the candidates have no drivers license, and this despite the fact that the advertisement clearly states that it is mandatory. But I thought taking the bus would be okay? Dear Miss Busrider, unfortunately, it is not okay! As the advert says, I live in a tiny village in the countryside with no access to public transportation. Thats the reason why Must have valid drivers license is capitalized and written in bold. Sorry, thank you for your interest, and good luck in your search for employment. First sigh. Is it so difficult to read (and understand) a beautifully crafted text and to then make sure that the profile matches the requirements BEFORE contacting me and wasting my time? Next call. Again; she doesnt drive. Me no bother take train or walk said a cheerful voice on the other end of the line. Do you really think that if there were trains, or everything within walking distance, would I have made the possession of a permit to drive a car a MUST HAVE requirement? Thank you for your interest and good luck in your search for employment hopefully somewhere close to a train station. Second sigh. Dont people drive anymore nowadays? No time to worry. Already the phone rings again. Shes trying to obtain her drivers license next week. Oh, I see. Im trying to think of a way to explain to the lady without offending her that I have problems with the idea of entrusting my dear children to a new driver who (hopefully) just passed the driving exam? Did she really believe that my three little angels are going to be her guinea pigs? I know it is difficult to win my confidence when it comes to trusting someone. But thats the way it is. I have principles and for me, security is not negotiable. Thank you for your interest and good luck obtaining the permit to drive. You might want to call me again next year providing you pass the test next week. And no, I dont know of anybody else in my neighborhood who currently wishes to hire a nanny. The morning continues and the calls keep coming in. I start to immediately cut short any interview where a potential candidate has never looked after children before. Not that my kids are particularly difficult although they sometimes do deserve a shot at winning a medal for ill will. Or when they seem to suffer from severe hearing problems during times when they completely ignore me in a way only they know how to ignore a caring mom that keeps insisting. I now also quickly end calls when the level of French (or English) is low or nonexistent; e.g. when I dont understand what the person on the telephone says to me: Can you please repeat? Where are you calling from? or what I say to the other person: Yes, my children need to be driven to school. No, they dont like being pushed. Is it me or is it them? Should I maybe check the text in the advert one more time? Perhaps I should expand the description of the tasks awaiting our new nanny?
