

Back In The Day For My Young Sisters and Brothers

National Best-Selling Author, Casandra Johnson, returns to present the Back in the Day Collection Series! This two-volume collection features memorable moments, which transcend across generations and helped to shape us, along with contributions from one of the worlds most renowned leaders, Dr. Myles Munroe, and New York Times Best-Selling Author, Eric Jerome Dickey. When I think of home, I think of the communities I once knew where everyone came together like family, even in the inner city. Home for me was our Nations Capital and its surrounding suburbs where there were not only historical landmarks such as the White House, Monument, Capitol, and various museums, but there were also communities built by families that were just as, if not more, beautiful. Back in the Day, we knew, understood, and valued everyone and everything that made up our neighborhood. Back in the day, we taught our children how to love, and not hate; how to give, and not take; how to build, and not tear down; how to be a friend, and not an enemy; how to communicate face to face, and not through cyberspace. We were kind, we were patient, we were personable, and we kept our word. We laughed together, cried together, played together, prayed together - we were unified in the home and community. ~From Back In The Day For My Young Sisters and Brothers
