

Into The Mystic

There is no imagination about Arcanes in this story. No more than an artist could paint the sun at noon could I imagine so great beings. But as a painter may suggest the light on hill or wood, so is in this fantasy. Try to imagine the spiritual excitement created by two people who pass dimly through the narrative, spoken of by others but not speaking themselves. I have delayed fear too long, for as I grow old, the moon of fantasy begins to set confusedly within me. The Arcanes has not the spiritual gaiety I desire. The friends with whom I once spoke of such things are dead and gone far from me. Now I share with you, the dreamer. If they were with me, out of dream, vision and intuition, I might have made the narrative a glow. As it is, I have only been able to light my way with my own flickering lantern into the mystic. A. E
