

One In A Million

From the preface: Although the development of an accurate, national registry is being advocated at the legislative level (H.R.1362/S.1273), it is unknown how many people have Parkinsons Disease. The web site of The Michael J. Fox Foundation For Parkinsons Research reasonably states: Estimates of the number of people living with the disease therefore vary, but recent research indicates that at least one million people in the United States have Parkinsons. One In A Million is the story of a daughters five years spent helping one of them her joyful, fun-loving mother. A surprising twist near the storys end adds considerably to the authors intention of promoting awareness of Parkinsons Disease, which in turn could help foster continuing research and, ultimately, a cure.
