

Althea

In her fathers household Althea Ervine was used to having the running of things until her father disowned her (again) and Althea fled to her sisters home in London. For the first time in her life Althea gave herself up to the gaiety of a purely social life, to the theatre and parties and the admiration of young men. The most ardent of these young men was Edward Pendarly, and Althea thought she could like him very much. But the infuriating, fascinating Sir Tracy Calendar hinted that Edwards intentions were not all they should be. But why did Sir Tracy care, and for that matter, what were Sir Tracys intentions?
